Glossary

Open Pollinated (a.k.a. OP): Seeds that result from pollination by insects, wind, self-pollination (when both male and female flowers occur on the same plant) or other natural forms of pollination. If you save seeds from open-pollinated varieties and grow them in following years, they will “come true,” meaning they will produce plants with characteristics or “traits” like their parent plant.

Heirloom: Open-pollinated varieties that have resulted from natural selection rather than a controlled hybridization process. We use 50 years as an age marker to define what constitutes an heirloom variety. Like any other open pollinated variety, seed saved from an heirloom produces plants with the same characteristics as the parent plant.

Hybrid (F-1): An “F-1”, or first-generation hybrid occurs when a breeder selects two pure lines (plants that produce identical offspring when self-pollinated) and cross-pollinates them to produce a seed that combines desirable characteristics or “traits” from both parents. Common traits breeders work to increase in hybrids might include disease resistance, uniformity, earliness, high nutrition, or color. Seeds can be saved and planted from F-1 hybrids, however, plants “will not come true”; in other words, they may lack the desirable characteristics of the parent plants.

Organic: When you see the word “Certified Organic” on a seed packet, it has distinct legal meaning. It can only be used by seed growers who follow all regulations specified by the USDA’s National Organic Program. In the US, the land in which crops are grown cannot have had prohibited substances applied for three years prior to harvest, and the operation must be managed according to an Organic System Plan and regularly inspected by a USDA accredited certifier. Organic seeds are grown strictly without the use of synthetic fertilizers and pesticides.
